OSHA investigation

warrant

The first time the Occupational Safety and Health Administration sent someone to investigate a tip about a loading dock accident at Anthony Marano Co.'s facility at 3000 S. Ashland Ave. in Chicago, OSHA didn't have a warrant and Marano's lawyer told the inspector to leave. But when the Secretary of Labor's representative returned with a supervisor, two federal marshals and a warrant from a U.S. magistrate judge, the attorney again barred entry this time because Marano allegedly had a right to pre-execution review by a district judge.

"The 7th Circuit has yet to speak definitively on whether employers subject to administrative inspection warrants have a constitutional pre-execution right to Article III judicial review of the validity of such warrants under the Fourth Amendment," Magistrate Judge Gabriel A. Fuentes explained when ruling on Marano's motions to stay and quash.

With a close look at precedent on administrative inspection warrants, Judge Fuentes concluded that (1) Marano didn't have a right to pre-execution judicial review and (2) the court didn't have

Appeals panel highlights issues with terms of media credentials between baseball club, photographer hurt working at Wrigley Field

A state appellate panel upheld a denial of the Chicago Cubs' motion to dismiss a lawsuit by an Associated Press photographer injured at Wrigley Field in a nonprecedential Rule 23 opinion.

Charles Arbogast was working in the designated photo well at Wrigley in July 2018 when he tripped and fell on a stack of pallets that photographers would stand on to take photos.

He later sued the Chicago Cubs Baseball Club, the Chicago National League Ball Club, Inc., and Chicago Cubs, Inc, in the Circuit Court of Cook County, alleging the stack caused a hazardous condition for those present. The lawsuit claimed the defendants were negligent in allowing such conditions to exist and not taking steps to either warn photographers of the danger or create safer conditions.

The Cubs filed a motion to dismiss, stating that media credentials issued to Arbogast included a link to the MLB Pressbox

Jamaica has history of bias, but rarely enforces laws: court

PATRICIA MANSON

A gay man failed to show he likely would be persecuted based on his sexual orientation if he is deported to his native Jamaica, a federal appeals court held.

The 7th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals denied Anthony Lloyd Murry's petition for review of the Board of Immigration Appeals' decision to deny him relief from

The court acknowledged that "most of Jamaican society has been homophobic" for much of the country's history.

"But Jamaica rarely enforces its anti-sodomy laws for consensual sexual relations, and recent reports show growing public support for gay rights," a panel of the court wrote in a per curiam opinion.

Murry came to the United States in 2005 to join his American fiancee. The two married a month after his arrival, and he applied to become a permanent resident some time after that.

Clarence Thomas speaks: Justice finds voice as SCOTUS term begins

The Supreme Court of the United States warmed up for a term expected to be a contentious, rightsevaporating sort of one, with five oral arguments in the opening week.

The first heard was an original jurisdiction matter, involving states and water rights. Contrary to expectations and the past terms when the court was live, Thomas asked the first question in the first case and the first questions of each advocate in a case involving the Armed Career Criminal Act.

Famous for his right to maintain his silence for long stretches, Thomas appears to have found his voice during the pandemic.

The ACCA case

ACCA provides sentence enhancements for felons who commit crimes with firearms if they are convicted of certain crimes three or more times. The questioning in the oral argument is worth a listen, with some great lines coming out of the case, as the justices struggled with the "three or more times" and whether they have to be three separate occasions.

Justice Elena Kagan asked: "Suppose that there boss and he was a good multitasking crime boss, and he had a few phones in front of him. He's sitting in his office one day, and on one phone he's arranging a sale of illegal drugs and on another phone he's ordering the killing of a - a competing crime boss and on another phone he's involved in an illegal gambling operation, they're all going on very close in time to each other. Single occasion or three occasions?"

Appellant's advocate posited, "This case, though, is the molten core of a single episode, and we would urge the Court to decide at least that much." Justice Samuel Alito asked what an episode meant following that question.

Justice Stephen Breyer compared Jesse James to his cousin Harry James, noting the argument being made and compared it as

Illinois task force considers changes to qualified immunity

JERRY NOWICKI

SPRINGFIELD - A new state task force continued discussions as to what changes could be made to the way state law approaches qualified immunity for law enforcement officers.

Qualified immunity protects officers and others against certain civil lawsuits seeking monetary damages for civil rights violations occurring during the course of their regular duties.

Courts have ruled that unless a plaintiff can prove the officer has violated a "clearly established" right meaning a court has ruled on a case that's almost exactly similar to the one it is considering — qualified immunity can be used as a defense to shield the officer from civil liability.

The Illinois Constitutional Rights and Remedies Task Force was created under the SAFE-T Act, a criminal justice reform omnibus bill that became law this year. It met virtually Thursday in its second of four meetings.

Scholars seeking to end qualified immunity told the task force reforms are necessary to ensure that all individuals who believe they've had their rights violated by police officers have the opportunity to seek justice in court.

But police group representatives painted qualified immunity as a little-used defense that's been "blown out of proportion." Ending qualified immunity, these panelists said, would make it more difficult to retain officers by making them live in fear of frivolous lawsuits. It could also increase financial pressures on municipal budgets by increasing litigation and insurance rates.

Both sides agreed cases dismissed on qualified immunity grounds are a "relatively small" fraction of the overall cases focusing on rights violations by officers.

Larry James, a partner at Crabbe, Brown & James in Columbus, Ohio, and general counsel for the National Fraternal Order of Police, noted qualified immunity doesn't protect against termination or discipline, only civil suits. It protects officers

CASE SUMMARIES

CIVIL PROCEDURE — MOTION FOR CHANGE OF VENUE

Where a plaintiff files in the wrong venue in error, they are not permitted to motion for a change in venue after the point at which the defendant has waived his right to motion for such a change.

Sangamon County Circuit Judge Ryan Cadagin.

Charmaine Wren received medical care from the Associated Physicians Group (APG) in 2016. On Feb. 5, 2016, she passed away. In 2018, Barbara Miller, as special administrator of Wren's estate, filed suit against APG and several medical staff who cared for Wren (defendants), as well as Highland Park CVS LLC. The original suit was filed in Madison County. Defendants moved to dismiss but prior to that being decided, Miller moved for voluntary dismissal, which was granted on Aug. 17, 2018. Miller attempted to re-file in St. Clair County, but this was rejected with the notation "Have to pay the fees for new case to be entered and jury demand that has been requested or there needs to be a waiver attched [sic]."

Miller then filed the instant medical malpractice complaint in Sangamon County. The caption of the complaint referred to St. Clair County and the 20th Judicial Circuit, and the jurisdiction and venue statement asserted that St. Clair County was the proper venue. The defendants moved to dismiss the complaint for noncompliance with section 2-622 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Code). Miller moved to transfer venue, claiming that Sangamon County had been inadvertently selected in the electronic filing process, and she had intended to file in St. Clair County. The circuit court denied the motion and gave Miller a week to file a forum non conveniens motion. She did so. The defendants objected, arguing that a plaintiff is not permitted to file a forum non conveniens motion. The court granted the motion and the defendants appealed.

On appeal, Miller argued that St. Clair County, where the care of Wren

The 4th District Appellate Court reversed and remanded a decision from took place, is clearly the proper venue and the court's ruling was therefore proper. The defendants asserted that, regardless of whether St. Clair was the proper venue, a plaintiff is barred from asserting the equitable doctrine of forum non conveniens because they themselves selected the forum.

> The appellate court noted that this was a matter of first impression, as prior to 2018 e-filing was not mandatory and an individual filing a complaint had to fill out the physical address on an envelope, rather than click an option, and an error of this sort has since become much easier to commit. However, the appellate court found they did not need to reach whether Miller could file a > > motion under forum non conveniens because "the facts do not fall under that doctrine." Forum non conveniens is used to determine which of two proper venues is the more convenient and appropriate. In the instant case, neither party asserts that Sangamon County is a proper venue.

> > The appellate court noted that seven months passed between the Sangamon County court's first hearing and Miller's motion to change venues, during which the defendants appeared and filed several motions. The venue statute requires a defendant to file a motion for change of venue "on or before the date upon which he or she is required to appear." The appellate court didn't not conclude that Miller was barred from a motion for change of venue, but that the time for such a motion had long passed, and that it "would be unjust to allow plaintiff to bring her motion objecting to venue after the statutory period for defendants had passed given the statute is designed to protect defendants.'

The appellate court therefore reversed the decision of the circuit court and remanded for further proceedings

CIVIL RIGHTS — DISPARATE IMPACT, DISPARATE TREATMENT

Where the teachers union failed to offer sufficient evidence that board of education could have implemented alternative procedures instead of laying off teachers due to budget shortfall, district court did not err in granting summary judgment to board.

The 7th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals affirmed a decision by Judge Jorge L. Alonso, Northern District of Illinois.

During the 2010-11 school year, the Board of Education of the city of Chicago concluded that it would need to eliminate certain teaching and paraprofessional positions for the upcoming school year. The conclusion was based on a significant projected budget deficit as well as declining enrollment in a number of Chicago public schools. Senior members of the Board met several times in May 2011 to consider options before instituting a series of spending cuts and deciding to close 1,077 teaching and 393 paraprofessional positions for the upcoming school year.

The Board decided which positions to eliminate and which CPS employees to lay off based on projected enrollment numbers. Before the 2011 layoffs, the Board employed approximately 27,240 union members. Approximately 8,048 of those employees were Black, equivalent to 30%. Around 1,470 union members received prior to the start of the upcoming school year. The panel however noted layoff notices, and over 600 of those were Black, equivalent to 40%. Many of those individuals worked at the South and West side schools where enrollment had declined most sharply.

In December 2012, several of the laid off teachers filed suit against the Board, alleging that the 2011 layoff decisions disparately impacted Black teachers and staff in violation of Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 and the Civil Rights Act of 1991. In May 2015, the district court certified the class, defined as all Black persons employed as a tenured teacher or staff member who received a layoff notice from the Board of Education pursuant to its layoff policy in 2011. The plaintiffs later amended the complaint to add a Title VII disparate treatment claim against the Board.

The parties filed cross motions for summary judgment. The district court granted summary judgment in favor of the Board. The court concluded that the class had failed to rebut the Board's legitimate business justification for the layoffs. The court found that the CTU had failed to provide evidence that the Board could have accomplished the same business objective in an equally efficient and less discriminatory way. The class then appealed.

The appellate panel began by addressing the CTU's disparate impact claim. The panel noted that neither party took issue with the district court's assumption that the plaintiffs made a prima facie case of disparate impact with the evidence that Black individuals comprised a higher percentage of the laid off teachers than of their general union membership, or the court's finding that the Board's decision to tie layoffs to declining enrollment in schools was legitimate, job-related, and consistent with business necessity.

CTU argued that the Board could have transferred laid off employees to open positions, and that this was borne out by the fact that approximately half of the Black employees who were laid off found new positions that CTU failed to provide any concrete detail as to how such a transfer plan would have operated and that the Illinois School Code places hiring discretion with principals, not the Board. Without more evidence as to how the Board could have overridden the existing system, the panel reasoned, the CTU had failed to carry its burden of demonstrating a viable alternative that the Board refused to adopt.

Finally, the panel turned to CTU's disparate treatment claim. The panel stated that the fact that layoffs disparately impact Black in a statistically significant way did not reasonably lead to the inference that the Board intentionally discriminated. The panel concluded that none of CTU's evidence undermined the determination that the Board used a raceneutral, bureaucratic mechanism to adjust staffing in Chicago public schools to meet the needs of declining enrollment and potential budget shortfalls. The panel therefore affirmed the decision of the district court.

Murry's application and began deportation proceedings.

At a deportation hearing before an immigration judge, Murry testified that he was attacked on the streets in Jamaica in 2004. One man called him gay and encouraged others to shun him, Murry testified, and then five men began hitting and kicking him.

He did not report the attack to police or seek medical help because he was afraid of reprisals, Murry testified.

The immigration judge considered evidence that included news reports of demonstrations against gay rights, the murder of two gay activists, the refusal of some police officers to help victims of anti-gay hate crimes and the country's anti-sodomy laws.

But in denying Murry relief from deportation, the judge cited a report that Jamaica seldom enforces its anti-sodomy laws for consensual sex. The judge also cited news articles reporting that leading government officials have voiced their support for gay rights, police have protected gay people from hate crimes and Jamaica's public defender has urged officials to prosecute attackers motivated by homophobia.

The panel did not disclose the immigration judge's name or further details about Murry's case. Access to several entries on the docket was limited to counsel of record.

Murry filed his appeal with the 7th Circuit in October 2020. Named as the respondent in his official capacity was then-U.S. Attorney General William P. Barr. The current attorney general, Merrick B. Garland, is now the respondent.

In its opinion Thursday,

7th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals

Anthony Lloyd Murry v. Merrick B. Garland
No. 20-3109

Judges Frank H. Easterbrook, Michael S. Kanne and Amy St. Eve writing for the court

the 7th Circuit panel upheld the immigration judge's ruling that Murry is not entitled to withholding of removal under the Immigration and Nationality Act.

To obtain this relief, Murry would have to show that his "life or freedom would be threatened" in Jamaica because of his "race, religion, nationality, membership in a particular social group, or political opinion," the panel wrote, quoting 8 U.S.C. Section 1231(b)(3)(A).

To show that his life or freedom would be threatened, the panel continued, quoting Garcia-Arce v. Barr, 946 F.3d 371 (7th Cir. 2019), Murry would have to demonstrate he was persecuted in the past because of his sexual orientation or that there is a "clear probability" he would be persecuted in the future because he is gay.

Murry failed to make that showing, the panel wrote.

"[P]ersecution requires the use of 'significant physical force,' " the panel wrote, quoting Stanojkova v. Holder, 645 F.3d 943 (7th Cir. 2011). "But because Murry received only bruises from the attack in 2004, the record did not require a finding that the attackers used such force."

And even if Murry was the subject of "significant physical force" in the attack, the panel wrote, "Murry needed to show government complicity."

Murry's failure to report the attack to police "justified the [immigration judge's] finding that the government was not complicit in or unwilling to respond to it," the panel wrote.

It wrote Murry also failed to show that the Jamaican government likely will persecute gay men as a group or single out Murry for persecution in the future.

"Murry cites anecdotal reports of past homophobic violence, but these reports principally involve private attacks, not state-sanctioned efforts to target gay men," the panel wrote.

Murry's failure to show he likely will face persecution in Jamaica, the panel wrote, also defeats his claim under the Convention Against Torture.

"[C]onduct that is not persecution under the Immigration and Nationality Act cannot amount to torture under the Convention," the panel wrote.

Panel members were Judges Frank H. Easterbrook, Michael S. Kanne and Amy St. Eve.

The case is Anthony Lloyd Murry v. Merrick B. Garland, No. 20-3109.

Murry is represented by Swaray E. Conteh of the Law Firm of Fatima Johnson in Indianapolis.

Garland is represented by Elizabeth Fitzgerald-Sambou and Sarah S. Wilson, both of the U.S. Justice Department in Washington, website, which listed full terms and conditions, including saying that "any and all claims" would be handled through "binding individual arbitration" in New York. This was supported by the affidavit of Alex Wilcox, the coordinator of media relations for the Cubs.

Neither Conteh nor a spokesperson for the Justice Department could be reached for comment.

The affidavit also stated that, for Arbogast to receive a media credential, a representative from the Associated Press was required to complete an online application on his behalf. In March 2018, Associated Press employee Michael Green applied for Arbogast's pass, agreeing to the terms and conditions of the credentials, which was mandatory.

In their motion to dismiss, the defense claimed that a contract was formed when Arbogast used his media credential to access Wrigley Field and photograph Cubs games, stating that the credential plainly stated the bearer would be bound to further terms and conditions that could be found online.

The plaintiff challenged these assertions, arguing that the defense had produced no evidence of any contract between Arbogast and the Cubs. Arbogast stated that he never gave Green or anyone else at the Associated Press permission to agree to an arbitration provision for him, and that being a non-signatory to a contract did not bind him to an arbitration clause he didn't agree to.

Further, they highlighted that Arbogast's press credential did not mention arbitration, and the website address for further terms and conditions was "set forth in regular type unhighlighted in any way." Once on the website, they argued, a user had to navigate a series of hyperlinks to locate the terms and conditions, which were 25 paragraphs long. The arbitration clause was at the 22nd paragraph.

The plaintiff also requested that Wilcox's affidavit be stricken, arguing that it relied on unattached documents, including his media credentials application that was submitted by Green.

After this response was filed, the defense filed a motion to extend the time for filing their reply brief. It stated that Arbogast had ample time to read the full terms and conditions, given his prior experience shooting the Cubs and his access to the internet. The trial court denied this motion without prejudice.

In an opinion filed Sept.

28, Justice James Fitzgerald Smith of the 1st District Appellate Court wrote that there is a "genuine issue of material fact" regarding a contract existing between the two parties, and that the trial court was correct to deny the Cubs' motion to dismiss.

Justices Nathaniel Howse and Terrance J. Lavin concurred in the judgment.

Smith rejected the argument that Arbogast's media credential application constitutes an accepted offer, writing that "the record fails to demonstrate the existence of any agreement."

"Neither the application itself nor any other communications involving that application are included in the record," he wrote. "As such, we have no evidence upon which to credit the Cubs' assertion that the submission of this application by Green had the effect of binding the plaintiff to the terms of any contract."

He also wrote that while Green had to click an acknowledgement stating that he agreed to the terms and conditions, this does not establish assent on Arbogast's behalf.

Further, Smith took issue with the Cubs' argument that Arbogast's press credential — which referenced the terms and conditions — constitute an accepted offer, writing that the record contains no evidence about "any communications made to the plaintiff about this credential, other than what is communicated on the physical credential itself."

He wrote that the contractual nature of the credential "is not obvious," and that its primary purpose is not related to contracting, nor is it something "that a person would normally consider contractual in nature."

"The trial court's denial of the motion to dismiss without prejudice was clearly proper, as the existence of genuine issues of material fact precluded dismissal in this circumstance," it reads.

Timothy S. Tomasik of Tomasik Kotin Kasserman LLC served as the lead attorney for the plaintiff.

"We are pleased the courthouse doors have not been unfairly closed, and Mr. Arbogast is free to pursue a verdict," Tomasik said.

Robert M. Burke and David M. Macksey, both of Johnson & Bell Ltd., served as lead defense attorney and appellate attorney, respectively. They declined to comment.

The case is Arbogast v. Chicago Cubs Baseball Club, LLC., 2021 IL App (1st) 210526-U.

B. Garman, Mary Jane Theis, P. Scott Neville Jr., Michael J. Burke and David K. Overstreet concurred. Justice Robert L. Carter took no part in the decision.

The other opinion issued by the high court Thursday involved Todd L. Johnson, who was found guilty by a Peoria County jury of the armed robbery of a gas station on March 10, 2015.

Evidence presented at the trial established that a 9millimeter pistol and a BB pistol were discovered on the premises where Johnson was arrested for robbing the gas station. The 9millimeter was swabbed for DNA, but the swabs were never tested.

Johnson filed a direct appeal, arguing that the trial counsel was ineffective for failing to request that the swabs be tested. He was granted a new trial by an appellate court on the basis of this claim.

In People v. Johnson, 2021 IL 126291, the Illinois Supreme Court affirmed the trial court's entry of judgment on Johnson's armed robbery conviction and reversed the appellate court's judgment granting him a new trial.

Johnson's ineffective assistance claim was dismissed on the ground that it lacked a showing of sufficient prejudice.

"It is unknown whether the swabs contain DNA sufficient for testing, let alone whether the results would be exculpatory," the opinion stated. "Furthermore, because there is no exculpatory evidence for us to consider, any opinion that could be made with respect to prejudice would be advisory."

Overstreet delivered the judgment of the court, with opinion. Anne M. Burke, Garman, Theis, Neville, Michael J. Burke and Carter concurred.

Detainee testimony?

In United States v. Zubadayab, the court is considering a case involving the alleged presence of a CIA facility in Poland. In a surprising move, toward the end, several justices raised the issue of the ability of the detainee to testify as to his knowledge.

After the advocate for appellant answered a question by noting that the detainee had the ability to communicate with his lawyers about the progress of his case, Justice Neil Gorsuch noted the evasiveness of the answer and the following interaction took place:

"JUSTICE GORSUCH: That – that's not really answering my question, I don't think, because I understand there are all sorts of protocols that may or may not, in the government's view, prohibit him from testifying. But I'm asking much more directly, will the government make the Petitioner available to testify on this subject?

"JUSTICE BREYER: The same terms? Look, I don't understand why he's still there after 14 years. It's a little hard to, given Hamdi,

A turning point

In 2017, Crystal Clanton worked for Turning Point USA, a conservative non-profit. In an article by The New Yorker in December 2017, Clanton is reported to have texted a fellow employee, "I HATE BLACK PEOPLE. Like [f---] them all

... I hate blacks. End of story." Justice Thomas' wife, Ginni, saved Clanton, hiring her for some of her work.

Jump ahead to present, and this soon to be graduate from the Antonin Scalia Law School at George Mason University will move on to a prestigious role as clerk at the 11th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals for Judge William Pryor.

All of us are worthy of forgiveness, but if this does not raise questions about our judiciary and where it is headed, humor me what does. Don't be surprised if Clanton's next redemption is a plum clerkship for a Supreme Court justice.

Conclusion

The English expression, may you live in interesting times, comes to mind repeatedly. See above, and then, consider a recent speech by Roger Kimball, editor and publisher of The New Criterion, at Hillsdale College, in which he opened:

"Notwithstanding all the hysterical rhetoric surrounding the events of January 6, 2021, two critical things stand out. The first is that what happened was much more hoax than insurrection. In fact, in my judgment, it wasn't an insurrection at all.

"An 'insurrection,' as the dictionary will tell you, is a violent uprising against a government or other established authority. Unlike the violent riots that swept the country in the summer of 2020 — riots that caused some $2 billion in property damage and claimed more than 20 lives — the January 6 protest at the Capitol building in Washington, D.C. lasted a few hours, caused minimal damage, and the only person directly killed was an unarmed female Trump supporter who was shot by a Capitol Police officer. It was, as Tucker Carlson said shortly after the event, a political protest that 'got out of hand.'"

Maybe that is what the right calls it, a little protest that got out of hand. Ask Mike Pence under oath and if you had truth serum. Last one checked, guillotines and posses looking for the vice president and others does not make a picnic or little protest. How much damage did the "getting out of hand" cause to our bedrock of democracy, our governmental buildings?

who had to make "splitsecond" decisions, he said. He noted the Supreme Court, which has largely affirmed qualified immunity as a defense, denied two such cases recently.

"They said where it is so egregious, that it is obvious that these officers have violated someone's civil rights, they're not going to grant qualified immunity," James said.

John Murphey, of Odelson, Sterk, Murphey, Frazier, McGrath, Ltd., frequently represents police departments. He said one of the most important components of the SAFE-T Act is the acelerated requirement for body cameras, which will "resolve a great deal of the litigation."

"But qualified immunity in the excessive force context is important too, because officers typically are reacting," he said. "They don't know for the most part what is behind that door, they don't know what's in the front seat of that car, or what's in that glovebox."

William Baude, a professor at the University of Chicago Law School, said he views qualified immunity as "problematic" based on constitutional concerns and the remedy of being able to bring an issue before a judge and jury, he said.

The task force will next meet on Oct. 21.

jurisdiction to rule on the motion to quash because the company failed to exhaust its administrative remedies. In re Establishment Inspection of Anthony Marano Co., No. 21 M 499 (Aug. 20, 2021).

Here are highlights of Fuentes's opinion (with light editing and omissions not noted):

Deciding Anthony Marano's motion to stay and motion to quash requires the court to look not only at the particulars of the warrant at issue here, but also to consider the evolving landscape of employer behavior toward administrative inspection warrants as anticipated by the U.S. Supreme Court when it extended Fourth Amendment warrant requirements to administrative inspections in Marshall v. Barlow's Inc., 436 U.S. 307 (1978).

The court also considers developments in the 43 years since that decision and in the 30 years since the 7th Circuit's decision in In re Establishment Inspection of Kohler Co., 935 F.2d 810 (7th Cir. 1991). The court looks to Kohler and other federal decisions in this circuit and elsewhere to reconcile the exhaustion doctrine with employers' Fourth Amendment rights when employers refuse to honor warrants issued by magistrate judges under Barlow's and force the secretary to defend them, before they can be executed, against Fourth Amendment validity challenges in federal court.

Anthony Marano's argument for the stay depends heavily on its view that it has a constitutional right, before the warrant is executed, to obtain judicial review of the validity of an issued warrant. The company insists that federal law, including the law of the 7th Circuit, "is clear that there is a pre-enforcement right to judicial review of an administrative warrant."

Anthony Marano has no pre-enforcement right to judicial review of an administrative inspection warrant in the 7th Circuit, and the weight of authority in the 7th Circuit and elsewhere suggests federal courts should not recognize such a right.

Anthony Marano contends that under 7th Circuit law, employers subject to OSHA administrative inspection warrants have a right to judicial review by an Article III judge, and from that premise, the company argues that employers have a right to require such judicial review to take place before execution of the warrant in order to preserve the employer's Fourth Amendment right against unreasonable searches.

The parties have cited to the court a divergence of decisions from federal courts outside the 7th Circuit, but from these cases, Anthony Marano argues that a pre-execution right to Article III judicial review of administrative warrants is grounded in two 7th Circuit decisions in which pre-execution motions to quash were made and ruled upon, and in two 3rd Circuit decisions holding that in order to avoid mootness of a motion to quash an administrative inspection warrant, the employer must seek to quash the warrant before it is executed.

The secretary relies on the 5th Circuit's decision in Trinity Marine Products v. Chao, 512 F.3d 198 (5th Cir. 2007), which declined to recognize an employer's constitutional right to pre-execution judicial review of administrative inspection warrants. The court considers these and other federal decisions against the backdrop of Kohler, which supplies perhaps the greatest amount of insight, in the 7th Circuit, into the available remedies of employers in Anthony Marano's circumstances.

U.S. District Court, Northern District of Illinois

U.S. Magistrate Judge Gabriel A. Fuentes writing for the court

The magistrate judge, in issuing the administrative inspection warrant, observed Anthony Marano's Fourth Amendment rights under Marshall v. Barlow's, which should not be extended to require a pre-execution right to judicial review.

We begin with the federal constitutional protections that Anthony Marano has as an employer and that were observed in this matter. The U.S. Supreme Court, in Barlow's, extended the Fourth Amendment warrant requirement to administrative inspections, but in a limited fashion.

In requiring OSHA to obtain an administrative inspection warrant from a neutral magistrate judge, the Supreme Court stated explicitly that "probable cause in the criminal law sense is not required." Instead, probable cause justifying an administrative inspection warrant "may be based not only on specific evidence of an existing violation but also on a showing that reasonable legislative or administrative standards for conducting an inspection are satisfied with respect to a particular establishment."

The Supreme Court in Barlow's reasoned that imposing this lower level of probable cause on administrative inspections protected Fourth Amendment rights without placing an undue burden on the inspection system and without making inspections less effective: Even if OSHA initially visited an employer without a warrant and was turned away, OSHA's loss of the element of surprise was not "immediately apparent" to the Barlow's majority, so long as "procedures were available for the secretary to seek an ex parte warrant and to reappear at the premises without further notice to the establishment being inspected."

The justices in the Barlow's majority, then, were silent on whether they would have had any greater concern about the loss of surprise, and the damage to the secretary's ability to enforce the OSHA act, in a situation in which OSHA visits without a warrant, is turned away, obtains an administrative inspection warrant ex parte, and then returns to the employer without notice but is turned away a second time based on the employer's insistence that it must first be afforded an opportunity to move to quash the warrant in the district court.

The Supreme Court in Barlow's was not presented with the question Anthony Marano has presented here, namely whether the federal court must entertain pre-execution challenges to OSHA's administrative inspection warrants, or whether that sort of requirement — effectively permitting the employer to refuse OSHA access in the face of a neutral magistrate judge's issuance of an administrative warrant — might undercut the Supreme Court's entire rationale for imposing a Fourth Amendment administrative warrant requirement on these inspections.

The Barlow's majority openly expressed doubt that its regime of requiring OSHA to obtain administrative warrants would consume OSHA's enforcement energies to a degree that "exceeds manageable proportions."

In a dissent joined by Justice Harry Blackmun and Chief Justice William H. Rehnquist, Justice John Paul Stevens questioned that assumption and suggested that the Barlow's majority's prediction — that covered employers would largely accede to warrantless inspections — might not come true.

Justice Stevens added that if employers began regularly refusing to consent to warrantless inspections, OSHA might need to develop a regular practice of seeking warrants in advance to avoid "an increase in the rate of refusals and the added costs generated by futile trips to inspection sites where entry is denied."

But even the Barlow's dissent did not appear to contemplate that employers would take their resistance to administrative inspections to a third level, where Anthony Marano and others have taken it, by defying inspection warrants issued by a magistrate judge and asking that judge or the district court to quash them before the secretary can execute them.

This court is bound to follow Barlow's and has done so, but the court cannot help but wonder whether the disagreement between the majority and dissenting opinions in that case might have been resolved differently if the Supreme Court had been presented with Anthony Marano's argument here that employers may subject the secretary to numerous denials of entry including after a magistrate judge has issued the administrative warrant.

Anthony Marano would like this court to extend Barlow's to hold that the Fourth Amendment not only requires a warrant for administrative searches under the lessened probable caused standard, but that it also requires the secretary to refrain from executing issued warrants if the employer asks a federal court for a second level of judicial review of those warrants.

Considering the legal and factual developments since Barlow's, and taking the available guidance from the 7th Circuit and other federal courts as discussed below, this court declines Anthony Marano's invitation to undertake such a radical extension of Barlow's and its progeny.

The 7th Circuit has held that employers must exhaust their administrative remedies before challenging an inspection warrant in federal court and has never found a right to judicial review of such warrants before their execution.

In re Establishment Inspection of Kohler Co., 935 F.2d 810 (1991), remains the clearest guidance in the 7th Circuit for employer motions to quash administrative inspection warrants outside the administrative process, and Kohler holds that employers must exhaust their administrative remedies before asking for relief in federal court.

Anthony Marano has no right to pre-execution judicial review of the warrant and thus no ground to seek that review through its motion to quash, which should be denied for lack of jurisdiction because Anthony Marano has not exhausted its administrative remedies.
